2. What you did there;
3. Why you think it was quiet
4. and explain how you felt about visiting that place.

answer question 1

Well, your questions have reminded me of a Classical Chinese Garden I visited last month. It was just a 30-minute walk away from where I live. I went to the park to let off steam after a long speech at school.

answer question 3

That garden was so quite for the reason that not many visitors were packed in here. The main reason why people are here is to relax and recover, so they do not talk too much.

answer question 4

I felt that garden is good-looking, well-designed, and comfortable after I visited.

first key: good-looking

The place is very beautiful to look, almost like a window on another world. Like other traditional Chinese park, there are a whole bunch of meadows, waterfalls, lakes, rockery there. The scenery seems to change every few feet.

Although it was winter last month, yet it was so amazing because snow makes it pure and neat. When I read the brochure, I found by the designer idea, the garden is breathtaking in every season. When in spring, all the red flowers bloom almost at the same time. By the way, the designer only planted red flowers. In summer, the trees are pretty green and shady and green so we can watch fish play in the glistening ponds. The trees change into yellow in autumn and the foliage looks absolutely fascinating. So from winter to autumn, colors here are white, red, green, and yellow. The change of colours make the garden so well-designed in my opinion.

third key: help me to relax, so comfortable

In fact, I did do too much there. The main thing I had done there is walking along the walkways. I even did not touch anything. I just breathed the fresh air and heard birds sing. All my pressure and fatigue had gone. It was very comfortable.

second key: different colors in different seasons

meadows

a field covered in grass, used especially for hay

let off steam

get rid of pent-up energy or strong emotion.
I'm sorry I yelled at you. I guess I needed to let off some steam.
